

Office Spider Rough Draft

- The scene starts off with an outside shot of a corporate office building on a bright, sunny day
- Then cuts to a scene where we meet our main character in his cubicle, typing away on his computer while jotting down notes
 - The main character very much gives off a strong workaholic vibe as you get a somewhat good look at his workspace, cubicle walls (such as things like a busy calendar, papers, and sticky notes pinned on many clipboards), and how hyper-focused he is on his computer and laptop.

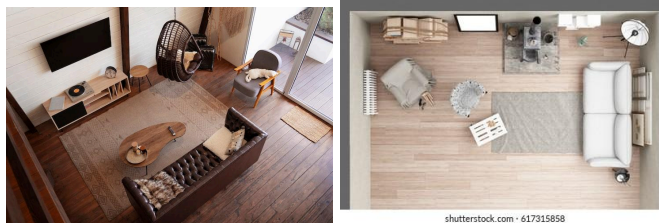

- As he is writing down notes, his little alarm on his smartwatch goes off, indicating it's time for a lunch break, and he starts packing his things (including his laptop) to head off to the break room
 - While that's happening, he glances at his very busy calendar and notices that today is donut day (the one day out of the week that the break room has donuts)
- The scene changes to our main character walking past all the cubicles, while struggling to carry his laptop on one side and notepads in the other, and finally getting to the break room itself
 - Once he's inside, he takes a big, deep sigh of relief and sets his things on the break room tables
 - The break room itself has a very lived-in feel in contrast to the corporate and grey look of the whole building itself (there is a long countertop with a sink at the end, a fridge beside that, a couch and a table or two, and a box of donuts on the countertop)

- In a little corner of the room, something small can be seen somewhat emerging
 - It cuts to a shot of the small thing's perspective as it sees everything in its vicinity, including our main character

-
- The scene cuts to him brewing up coffee while he walks over to the other end of the countertop to check out a box of donuts, but finds it empty upon opening it and only sees a small sticky note attached to the top lid that says “out to get more”
- With an annoyed look from our main character, he heads back to the coffee maker, pours his drink, and heads back to the table with his things
 - Our main character starts to set up his things while sitting down and continually starts typing away on his laptop while he takes a sip from his drink
- We get another low perspective shot from the small creature as it slowly inches itself closer and closer to our main character
- The scene changes back to our main as he takes another sip, but he stops for a moment and senses a disturbance in the room
 - He turns his head slowly and finally sees what was causing him such a weird feeling. His heart starts to quicken, and he begins to sweat
- Our main character starts to look around for something to “deal” with the spider while also simultaneously keeping an eye on the spider
 - He heads over to the cabinets and drawers and rummages through them to finally find a fly swatter
 - When he finally turns around, he notices the spider is gone
 - In a panic, he starts to frantically look around while trying to keep his calm
 - The shot for this scene could be a dramatically high angle to help give a sense of urgency of finding the spider

- We get another shot of the spider’s perspective as it’s now facing behind our main character
 - Our character gets another chilling sense and turns to finally see the thing
- As our main character is about to steady his hand to hit the spider with the flyswatter, he gets interrupted by someone opening the break room door
 - A fellow co-worker walks in with a smile on her face but then immediately drops it when she starts to process the situation at hand, and before our main character can ask for help from her, she’s immediately gone
 - (Kinda like this one robot chicken sketch <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=zL6myHgZe0>)

- Once our main character realises his co-worker is never coming back, he sets his focus back on the spider, only to find out that, just like his co-worker, that spider is gone
 - Panic starts to set in again; his hands start to shake and make him feel as though his head is spinning
 - He is frantically looking around, looking at every corner, flat surface, and nook and crannies

- As the main character spirals more and more into a frightening insanity, the breakroom door behind him slams open, startling our main guy as
 - Out comes another one of his co-workers who seems to be holding a box of freshly baked donuts (that look super duper yummy), and is happily whistling to himself

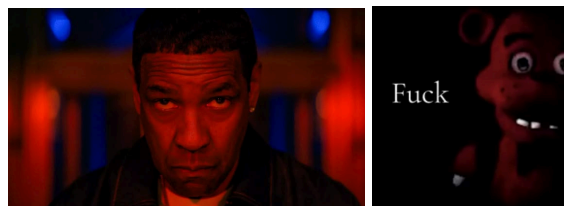

- As this is happening, our main character watches his co-worker pass through only to notice a small black dot in the distance slowly moving around on a wall
 - Immediately, our main guy knows exactly what that small speckle is and tries to warn his co-worker by waving his hands frantically
 - Our main guy gets his co-worker's attention, and he starts to point in the direction the spider
 - But of course the spider hides behind a picture frame before our main character's co-worker could even turn to look
 - His co-worker sees nothing and shoots a confused look at our main guy
- Our main character's eye twitches, but he takes a deep breath and walks over to the wall to try and confront the small beast himself, since now he's not alone
 - As this is happening, our main guy's co-worker is silently being attacked by the spider, for it has somehow gained the upper ground
 - By the time our main guy walks up to the picture frame and looks behind it, he is confused on seeing nothing there, but he hears a faint "hmmhmmmm" and finally turns around
 - His now co-worker is a spindled-up body bag with the box of donuts on top of him
 - And to add more pressure to the wound, the spiders crawl up on the donuts and starts mocking our main guy by dancing on top of the donuts

○

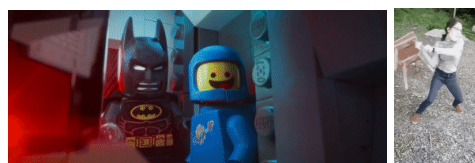

- Seeing this mocking display triggers something in our main character and turns all the fear that was building up in his body into pure anger. (because how dare this small insignificant bug laugh in his face by desecrating the one sacred thing he looks forward to every Thursday afternoon... oh and for attacking/wrapping up his co-worker too I guess)

■

- Our main guy looks around to see what he could use to bring that wretched spider to justice and remembers the flyswatter in his hand
 - He charged at the little creature and wound up his hand to give a hard blow, only for the spider to leap away at the last minute from the donut box
 - The hard smack from the fly swatter causes our main character's co-worker to loudly grunt on impact, but that doesn't matter because the spider is getting away
 - He see the spider scurrying away on the floor, and he woundss up his hand again, this time with faster and more deliberate swats
 - The spider itself effortlessly dodges all the attacks, and our main guy tries to do another hard blow, only for the swatter to break on impact
 - Our main character stops to look at the broken swatter and ultimately decides to throw it at the creature, only to miss
 - The spider makes it way to a wall and quickly crawls up it
- Our main character quickly heads over to to the countertop to find anything to throw at the thing
 - He opens cabinets and throws whatever's inside at the spider including a random chair but misses every shot, even though the bug is perfectly centered on the wal

■

- What felt like forever, our main guy finally runs out of things to throw that were near him

- He still tries to rummage through drawers to find anything until he knocks over an air freshener
- Right next to the knocked-over can, he sees a candle lighter and gets an awful idea
- We cut to a shot that says 15 minutes later, where we then hear a smoke alarm going off in the background
 - We then cut to the break room door opening, revealing a large man (the boss) and our main character's fellow employee, who was the same girl who left him to deal with the spider (turns out she went to find help)
 - As they both looked around, they were in shock at the state their beloved break room is in
 - They looked for the corporate behind this mess, and they see our main character on top of staked tables/chairs who looks like a crazed savage that's somehow escaped its cage
 - Our main guy notices his boss and fellow co-worker and realised the situation he created doesn't paint him in a good light
- It then immediately cuts to our main character outside the corporate office building with his boss
 - Our main guy has just gotten fired and is holding all his things in a big box, with a sad look on his face
 - The boss himself has very grumpy mug on his face and points in an outward direction, indicating for our main character to leave and never come back
 - In a big huff, the boss crosses his arms and walks away, and there seems to be that darn awful spider on his back
 - Our main guy was about to say something to warn his now-former boss, but decided not to care and walked off

Fin